(Ekjon "chikitsaa-rekha" byaktii tairi kora haloi, yai ekti pharmakogenetik satyer upar anuvadit eki charitra nirnay.)

Explanation:

* Treatment-resistant: [illegible] (chikitsaa-rekha) directly translates to "treatment-resistant" as it conveys the idea of someone who doesn't respond well to treatment.
* Pharmacogenomic fact: [illegible] (pharmakogenetik saty) means a genetic fact related to drug response, acknowledging that individual variations in genes can influence how a person responds to medication.
* Character verdict: [illegible] (nirnay) is the Bengali word for "verdict" or "judgment," emphasizing that labeling someone as treatment-resistant based on their genetic makeup is a complex issue, not a simple label.

□□ □□ □□□□□□□□□ □□□□□□ □□ □□□ □□□?

(Aar ei sampadhi tumike ki kara hoy?)

Explanation:

This question, while seemingly simple, requires a nuanced approach due to the context of harm reduction and recovery. The original phrase "What the substance was doing for you?" carries a sense of understanding and reflection. The Bengali translation aims to capture this:

 "□□ □□ □□□□□□□□□" (Ar ei sampadhi): This translates literally as "and this substance," but emphasizes the impact of the drug on the individual.
 "□□□□□□" (Tumike): "for you" directly conveys the personal focus.
 "□□ □□□ □□□?" (Ki karo hoy?): "What was it doing?" maintains the original meaning while sounding natural in Bengali.

The translation avoids being overly literal or clinical, aiming for a warm and direct tone suitable for a supportive conversation around recovery.

□□□□ □□□□□ □□□□□□□□□ □□□□□□ □□□□□ □□□□?

(Samaj aapnike kshatigrahana katar kebhabe thake gechhe?)

Explanation:

This question directly and empathetically asks why society has stigmatized or excluded someone, reflecting the non-judgmental tone of the original framework. The Bengali translation uses a natural phrasing that conveys the same meaning while being culturally appropriate.
